Why crémant is the best sparkling wine to drink now

On hot sunny evenings, reach for one of these bottles for your fix of something sparkling

Crémant has gone from strength to strength

I haven't written about sparkling wine for quite some time - in fact, I'd barely opened any for months until this week. But, despite everything, there are still birthdays, anniversaries and other celebrations that may well deserve a glass of fizz - not least now that small gatherings are allowed.

The long, hot evenings have got me back into bubbles, and the type I'm pouring at the moment, partly because of its extraordinary price/quality ratio, is crémant.

Under £8

2017 Abbotts & Delaunay, Les Fleurs Sauvages Mourvèdre

France, 13 per cent

Majestic, six for £7.99 each

A big beast of a smoky, herby, liquorice and black forest fruit-stashed mourvèdre, from a winery that specialises in tasty, mostly single varietal wines from the Languedoc. Les Fleurs will tackle everything from burnt barbecued fare to a pot roast with ease.

Beyond Champagne: French Crémant to try

French Crémant - such as Crémant de Loire and Crémant de Bourgogne - can offer good value versus Champagne and a different style to Prosecco. Here are some recommendations to try this Christmas...

Calvet, Brut Rosé, Crémant de Bordeaux

+ Add to My Wines

A light, aromatic crémant made in the traditional method from Cabernet Franc and Merlot. Crunchy strawberry and raspberry flavours with a touch of biscuit, fine bubbles filling the mouth, balanced acidity and a rounded finish. Great as an aperitif - worth trading up from cheaper options.
